He went into Landeker's room, and saw him lying in bed covered completely with blankets Young Stearn pulled the blankets off and saw the young man lying on his back, a 38-calibre revolver clutched in his right hand.

No one had heard a pistol shot, which was evidently due to the fact that Landeker's family Nove in Germany, he being the only member of it to come to this country. He was a good athlete, and while in San Francisco belonged to the Clympic and other athletic clubs of that city.

The news of Landeker's suicide was received at the offices of Neustadter Bros., where he was employed, at 11 o'clock, it was a great blow to Isaac Oppenheimer, who has charge of the businees in this city. Landeker was related to members of the firm, and they had taken an unusual interest in his advancement.

According to one of the firm's representatives, there is no possibility that his accounts could have been mixed up. They think rather that he became despondent at being away from home and among strangers.

Decause there was a stain on his character. He wanted Mayor Gilroy to remove the blot.

Policeman Malone told the man that the Mayor's Removal bill was not a law and he could not be accommedated at present. That seemed to satisfy the fellow, and he went away without seeing the Mayor.
